Goffstown, NH ; Grand Rapids, MI; Kalamazoo,MI; Muskegon, MI – May 11, 2009: PelletSales.com, the nation's leading provider of biomass fuels for home heating, announced today it has added selected areas throughout the western part of Michigan to its delivery area in response to overwhelming demand for wood pellets in those areas.

"We're committed to making premium, renewable biomass fuels available throughout the country and helping Michigan residents find pellet fuel is important," said Jon Strimling, President and CEO of PelletSales.com. "Wood pellets are a domestically-produced alternative to heating oil and other fossil fuels that has saved consumers up to thousands of dollars on their heating bills."

PelletSales.com is also alerting consumers that oil pricing is on the rise again, with futures markets projecting oil to break $62 a barrel by fall – just when home heating oil will take a toll on many homeowners' pockets. This trend will likely set the pace for other types of heating fuels in the region. Conversely, PelletSales.com is currently offering wood pellets at season-low prices.

Throughout the past 20 years, wood pellets have remained remarkably price stable, while other types of heating fuels has fluctuated greatly," Strimling said. "With wood pellets, consumers can have peace of mind because their heating fuel costs aren't subject to foreign variables and potentially warring regimes. We aren't sure when oil prices will rise, just that they will rise."
